THE CONVENTION.

The democratic convention held in Prescott on Saturday promises to be a historical event, in that it will be the last territorial convention to be held before the admission of Arizona as a state. This convention is also entitled to rank in history as one composed of the most representative men of the party. History also should record that the Prescott convention was harmonious in action and straightforward and open-handed in its work.

The nomination of Marcus Aurelius Smith as the democratic candidate for congress was assured from the day it became known that he was a candidate; from eleven counties the delegates were unanimous for our present delegate and after the nomination had been made, his opponent, Eugene Brady O'Neill of Phoenix, paid a high tribute to Smith and pledged that he and his friends would be found working early and late for a greater democratic victory than was ever before recorded in Maricopa county. Mr. O'Neill stated in the convention that, based on the democratic vote for Mark Smith this fall, he expected to see Maricopa county distance Cochise in the size of its delegation in the next territorial or state convention. Such a statement from O'Neill must be accepted as evidence of his entire satisfaction with the work of the convention except, perhaps, in its failure to nominate him for congress.

The platform adopted by the convention is regarded as a clear cut and honest declaration of a desire on the part of the democratic party to see Arizona and the people of Arizona share all the benefits which it is believed will result from a vigorous application of the principles of reform promulgated in the national democratic platform.

While the platform breathes a spirit of fairness to all and guarantees just treatment towards capital invested or seeking investment in the development of the resources of the territory, it declares that unjust, exorbitant or discriminating freight or passenger rates on railroads will not be permitted.

The declaration for legislation which would provide better roads in Arizona is one which should receive the endorsement of every citizen in the territory who favors the continuation of progress in Arizona.

The platform enforces the direct primary election system which permits every voter to record his individual choice in selecting candidates for office. This declaration should be approved by every citizen of the territory who believes in pure politics and the elimination of the boss from our political system.

The democratic platform calls attention to the present deplorable incorporation laws in Arizona under which many incorporations have been formed here by people residing in every section of the union, without any knowledge of their assets or legitimacy. It is wrong for Arizona to permit industrial wildcaters to link the fair name of Arizona with their faking schemes. Of course under our laws a great many companies have been formed here by non-residents for praiseworthy and legitimate business pursuits, but it is true that many companies have been incorporated without assets tangible or intangible.

The democrats at Prescott paid a just tribute to the pioneers of Arizona for the great service rendered the territory in the early days and condemned the republican governor for vetoing the act passed by the last legislature providing for a pioneer's home in this territory.

As a whole the democratic convention held at Prescott last Saturday was a success both in its selection of a candidate for congress and in agreeing to such an admirable declaration of principles.

The political doper of the Dispatch continues to insist that the republicans in Arizona can do nothing without a "well financed campaign." That idea probably accounts for the boom being inaugurated for the millionaire sheep owner of Apache county.

The democratic platform in Arizona should appeal to the voters for a hearty support. It is made plain in that document that the democrats of Arizona are in perfect accord with the spirit of reform which is contained in the national platform.

The Arizona Blade, published at Florence, has just published a handsomely illustrated edition on coated paper, showing the new prison now under construction near Florence, and several sections of that flourishing city. Florence is rapidly gaining prominence.

SPRAY

By Byron Williams.

Where the river sings over the dam,
I am standing,
And the spray from the foam-cloud
is flicking my face;
I am standing knee deep in the fast
gliding waters,
In the hurrying waters that swirl
from the race.

Ah! the faith of the boy as he stands
in the shallows,
As he throws out his bait to the
watery world;
How his whistle rings blithe with
expectancy teeming,
That his string shall be filled ere
the fishline is furled.

Where the river sings love songs in
cadences dreamy,
I am casting my line to its utter
most length,
I am barefoot and freckled, my trousers
need mending,
But my joy and my faith are as prime in their strength.

THE PIONEERS.

The declaration contained in the democratic territorial platform in favor of building a home in Arizona for the pioneers of this territory who may be in need of care and assistance in their declining years is a timely one. There is no class of people in the United States more deserving of gratitude than the pioneers who were first to arrive and strike camp on Arizona soil. It required courage, energy and bravery to face the hardships and dangers encountered in Arizona forty years ago, but the early comers went to work with a will to develop the resources at hand and subdue the hostile Indians. With rifle in one hand and a miner's pick in the other, the early prospectors searched in the mountains for mineral ledges; it was these pioneers who made the original discoveries at Jerome, Clifton, Globe, Bisbee, Silver Bell and other districts.

Obligation to these pioneers should be accentuated by the results of their coming to the sun-kissed land and the knowledge that Arizona has already become the greatest copper state in the union. It was the pioneers who first dug the ditches and took the waters from the Hassayampa, the Salt, the Gila and the San Pedro rivers and, by irrigating the then desert valleys, demonstrated the fertility of the soil and the possibilities of making Arizona a great agricultural state in the future.

Will the present population of Arizona hesitate in the duty of caring for the remaining and tottering pioneers of this territory? Certainly not. The democratic platform condemns the veto interposed to prevent the building of a home for the pioneers of Arizona, as a result of a bill enacted by the last legislature. The democrats pledge their support to this measure, as a mark of respect and gratitude to the men who blazed the trail for civilization and prosperity in Arizona.

the German at a ball at White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., a few evenings ago. Colonel Bryan is getting ready to make the republican candidate imitate the dance of a tenderfoot out west before the arrival of next election day.

SOWING THE WHIRLWIND.

Owen Waller of New York, the negro secretary of the Cosmopolitan club, an organization well established in the memory of the public for the black and white dinner of last winter, has made the announcement that another dinner will be given in New York in October. The plans, he says, are being matured, and the country will presumably again be treated to the details of elegantly gowned women being taken in to the banquet by negroes.

In the opinion of the Fort Worth Record the dinner of last year was in many ways one of the most shocking things which has ever occurred in America, and in this opinion most people will join. The inequalities of the race are not a thing which the white man has made nor which he may unmake. Superior peoples and races there have been since humanity has been and will be so long as humanity is. It was so ordered in the first great plan, and there is no argument which will alter the fact. The Creator made the white man superior and so he must remain. The argument does not make any appeal to race hatred, nor for any injustice or bitterness—it is merely an incontrovertible fact and argues only for race purity. An admixture of the races is fundamentally wrong and only evil can grow out of it.

The broadest minded of negroes realize this as completely as do the whites. They also know that the really better class of white people, to whom they may confidently look for aid and guidance in a greater mental development and better condition industrially and economically, are not those who participate with them at free-for-all Cosmopolitan dinners.

Without any desire to discuss well known conditions north and south, it is a plain statement of fact that a Cosmopolitan club dinner would not be possible anywhere in the south and in few places north outside of New York. And New York is sowing the wind to reap the whirlwind. If this fool business of race equality isn't checked we shall one day have a condition terrible even in contemplation. There are even now conditions (concerning the race question in New York) the recounting of which would revolt, but fortunately the good American people of New York are quite as rebellious at sight of it as any people south could be. One of two things must inevitably follow; the talk and practice must be rooted out and the very earth where once it grew sterilized against its return, or there will be established a caste in America with lines drawn as sharply as they were in India. If there be those white people who persist in the theory that they are not a superior race, nothing can stop them from bringing about the degeneracy of their own blood, but there will always be those who, conscious of superiority, will constitute that upper caste into which no mixed people can ever enter. That may mean the real war of the races in time too distant to compute. Certainly it seems in the negro question "After us, the deluge."

Should the republicans decide to nominate the Apache county sheep man for congress he'll be Mark Smith's motion.

We hear no complaint of scarcity of funds in the republican campaign camp. We would like to see the list of contributors to Taft's campaign expenses, just to see how much Harriman is giving this year.

Can it be that the man taken into custody at Pomona, Cal., who can remember nothing of his past, is simply a railroad official in training for his appearance before the Interstate Commerce Commission.
